Bell's British Theatre Book Of Words

The Lyceum Theatre season opened in September 1871, and the first two plays were box office failures. After a few years' schooling while living at Halestown, near , Irving became a clerk to a firm of merchants in London, but he soon gave up a commercial career for acting. I thank them also for their timeliness in responding to editorial queries and for their flexibility in adapting their vision of the topic at hand to the requirements of a work that had to be at once comprehensive and of reasonable length.
