Parents' etiquette on the sidelines plays role in how kids feel about playing sports

The Societal Costs of Bad Adult Behavior I cannot help but think that somber numbers such as these help explain why 70% of youngsters quit playing organized sports by the time they turn 13, and why nearly all quit by the time they turn 15. I love seeing them work through struggle and disappointment. It doesn't matter whether anyone keeps score or not, every single solitary child knows what the score of the game is.

Winning Isn't Everything...

No man is pure and often utter good and bad things and to dismiss TR as a manifest destiny yahoo is wrong just as it would be wrong to dismiss abraham lincoln as a racist based on what he wrote at one time.

How college coaches evaluate parents on the sideline

It depends on interest and the child's personal ability to deal with it.

Addressing Yelling Parents And Other Bad Behavior On The Sidelines

The sidelines were filled with parents and grandparents watching a preschool soccer game — the last one of the season. Offended, I mean every kid except for YOURS! The scoreboard matters, but other things matter more. That goes for players, parents of all young players, and coaches.
