The Archaeology of Israel and Palestine

Conder did an equally important work, and as the head of the archaeological party could finally report 10,000 place-names as having been gathered, and 172 new Bible sites successfully identified, while the boundaries of the tribes had been practically settled and many vitally important Bible locations for the first time fixed. In spite of this perspective, Garstang's expedition revealed very important aspects of the site: Mesolithic and especially Neolithic layers, the period when Jericho was one of the most relevant sites of the whole Fertile Crescent; the huge necropolis west and north of the site, with a series of familiar tombs from the Early, Middle, and Late Bronze Age. Information depicted with Isotype International system of typographic picture education, a method for assembling, configuring and disseminating information and statistics through pictorial means, invented by Otto and Marie Neurath.
