Healthy People

To meet these challenges, health professionals need to better understand the health needs of the elderly and the available preventive interventions. Similar to schools, outdoor work settings are an important setting for efforts to prevent overexposure to the sun and reduce skin cancer risk. These organizations can also serve as messengers to share information about the benefits of walking and walking programs and ways to improve walkability.

History & Development of Healthy People

For the first time, Healthy People 2030 also sets 10-year targets for objectives related to social determinants of health. All the health professions can play a role in reducing the burden of disease in America by calling attention to these and other risk factors and suggesting appropriate actions. Most of these focus on dental caries prevention, such as fluorides and dental sealants, where a combination of services is required to achieve optimal disease prevention.
