Report on the Charities of the Fishmongers' Company: Part I

If the doctrine of the Holy Spirit is to be carried to such extravagant lengths, when the age and necessity of miracles is past, as to sanction the idea of superior qualification in the eyes and judgment of men, except that which arises from a higher cultivated mind and reason- 206 MEMOIRS OF able grounds of hope, from a superior strictness and decency of moral conduct, the barriers against presumption, enthusiasm, and fanaticism are instantly burst ; and the laws of nature being without the direction and even in spite of the Deity, who has given these laws to nature, broken down, in rush all the demons of discord and confusion ; science retires; fancy flies before a disturbed imagination ; the blue skies of reason are overcast with the storms of misdirected feelings ; and the angels and forms of light, which a merciful religion represents as tutelary to man by Heaven's permission, are changed into the appearance of avenging furies. Original spelling edition, Translated by William Tyndale, Transcribed by W. In particular, the bishop took to heart the express wish of George I that he should reside in Derry.
