It is a compelling story and one which leaves the reader asking why, when the resources were so great, local and national opposition weak, and initially barely organized, and the neuro-scientific evidence base on impact so strong, has the campaign to introduce preschool across the United States achieved such a partial success. Having determined preschool as a priority policy in 2001, the foundation shrewdly decided to create separate funding arrangements for research and advocacy work. While Bushouse addresses the question, and places the work of the Trust in the literature surrounding the influence of private foundations, motivation is never systematically explored.

Even when the educational case is largely uncontested, change can in no way be taken for granted. With Pew, Pre-K Now, and NIEER operating through tight, interlocking relationships, underpinned through regular contact, including monthly phone calls, the infrastructure behind a universal preschool strategy was put in place.

Examines recent trends in state-funded preschool education. The author discusses the factors determining power under three broad headings: 1 capabilities, including the resources on each side and the efficiency with which they can be used for productive or conflictual ends; 2 payoff functions--the equations that translate productive efforts into income and conflictual efforts into distributive shares; and 3 protocol, or the rules of the game, which determine what solution is applicable Visual 1 edition published in 2000 in English and held by 76 WorldCat member libraries worldwide An anthology of films from 18 American film archives.
