TenHouten, W. D. (2007). A General Theory of Emotions and Social Life. New York, NY Routledge.

Stress is likely to result if a stressor is perceived as threatening and few or no effective coping options are available. In addition, there is frequently little correlation between how we score on the moral stages and how we behave in real life. According to this theory, we laugh a physiological response to a stimulus, and consequently we feel happy an emotion; we cry, and consequently we feel sad.

Written by leading social theorist Warren D. To this end, participants held a pen in their mouth in one of three ways: the Lip position would contract the orbicularis oris muscle, resulting in a frown; the Teeth position would contract the zygomaticus major or the risorius muscle, resulting in a smile; and the control group would hold the pen in their non-dominant hand. The man should steal the drug because life is more important than property.

In the specific context of emotion and stress, Lazarus described primary appraisals as judgments about the degree of potential harm or threat to well-being that a stressor might introduce. Cannon—Bard theory of emotion: The Cannon—Bard theory states that physiological arousal and emotional experience occur simultaneously, yet independently.

A General Theory of Emotions and Social Life

They found that injecting the drug did not lead participants to experience any given emotion. The scope of coverage of this key work is highly topical and comprehensive, and includes the development of emotions in childhood, symbolic elaboration of complex emotions, emotions management, violence, and cultural and gender differences.
