In doing so, members could assess whether the WTO rule book is properly equipped to deal with emerging challenges or whether existing disciplines need to be clarified or amended. The main beneficiaries will be the developing countries and Bali provides an excellent opportunity to find a way forward. These two prohibitions are thought to be leading candidates for an agreement because of a general understanding that subsidies in these situations, particularly to IUU fishing, are especially egregious that, at least in principle, the disciplines could apply to all WTO members equally.
