Dysart to Leven on the Fife Coastal Path

Stagecoach buses: £10 one way, £10. If this is the case, you will also be sent soft copies of your walking pack documents by email. It follows the coastline of the Fife peninsula along the Firth of Forth, the North Sea coast and the Firth of Tay.

Coastal Walks

When you reach a split in the road at a stand of beech trees go right there is a small wooden marker post with an arrow. Starting in North Queensferry, right beneath the impressive Forth Bridge — a cantilevered railway bridge — the trail leads out of the town and enters the Carlingnose Point Wildlife reserve. Here there is a miniscule advert for safety boots and footwear.

Coastal Walks

Adjacent to the arch you will see a small Scots Pine and a plaque commemorating the twinning of the Fife Coastal Path and the Skaneleden Trail in Skane, Sweden. The sand along the coast is black as well as golden, a reference to the once profitable, now plundered coal seams of this area. Anyone who follows my exploits knows this is business as usual, and it did not last long.

Fife Coastal Path: Cambo and Tentsmuir

This path leads you to a turning left onto Hillend Road which takes you back onto Inverkeithing High Street. The March Stone, dated 1794, acted as a boundary for fishing rights, dividing the Shanwell and Old Muirs salmon fishing areas. The walled garden includes some quirky sculptures as well as plants.

Wormit Bay to Newburgh

Head out along the beach path sticking to the Tay shoreline until the lovely woodland at Birkhill. It was really so very pleasant.

Wormit Bay to Newburgh

The water was almost completely smooth, like glass. The sidewalks were very icy here so I walked on the grassy verges to avoid tumbling. When you reach the main road, turn left, cross over and turn first right into Alexander Street and Summer Road.

Nearest Major Airports: Edinburgh Airport. It was the Pictish province of Fibh, last ruled by a king in the 9th century. If using this route for a group or organised walk please credit Fife Walking as your source.
