It is a harvest which allows you to connect with nature, elements in all its candor.

Katsura Imperial, Zen Buddhist Villa

The small structures were built to incorporate qualities that are at the essence of the tea ritual, such as harmony, silence, and reverence. This was very unusual to have in view of the tea drinkers and not in the back of the house. In 1881, their history as Katsura-no-miya ended when Imperial Princess, Sumiko died.

History

After this, the fourth and fifth generation princes died in their teens, making additions to the Katsura Imperial Villa impossible. The area had been well-known as a spot for moon-viewing long before the villa was constructed, and it also has been closely related to the Tale of Genji which was written in the Heian Period.
