The Day is Done by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow

During this period, all the farmers are busying themselves with the work in their tea fields. Accept the fluster of lost door keys, the hour badly spent. This title provides the narrative of George O'Brien's childhood in the somnolent river-valley settlement of Lismore, County Waterford, during the 1950s.

Longing

In obsession, what is sought matters less than the seeking. I would remember my life in Vrindavan in each place. Mez, Adam viii, 663p Kitab Bhavan 1995 repr.

The Day is Done by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow

The cultural identity of whiteness was constructed, and is upheld, to facilitate the colonization of other peoples' lands and cultures in service of Empire and those privileged within. On Navroz, for instance, a drum is beaten before the morning azaan, and processions and performances of dance and music are spread through the day, ending with the customary polo match in the evening. As it turned out, we were not meant to be cayuse and cowgirl.

France has passed a law to protect 'sensory heritage' in rural areas, putting a check on entitlement of city slickers

So every single day for nine years, before eating I would go for Vrindavan parikrama for twenty minutes in my meditation. An increasing number of city slickers have vacation homes in rural areas, to enjoy peace and serenity.

The Macmillan Company, New York, 1951. It describes the life and surrounding of an only child raised in a close-knit society: the town of Lismore and its inhabitants; the twin empires of Castle and Church; ball-alley, hurling field and point-to-point; and the tides of migration, the lure of foreignness.
