Research Training Program

The rigid rules and regulations we are bound by, which stipulate not merely which procedures have to be followed for each activity, but how these must be performed, make it impossible for us to do our jobs effectively.

Government by design: Four principles for a better public sector

Designed by Sir Michael Barber, the framework aims to improve public sector productivity, in part by connecting public spending more explicitly with what public bodies are trying to achieve for citizens. It will be especially unfair for those in the developing world — and even in many poorer, less populous parts of the developed West, there will be cruelties for those who live outside the metropolitan core, as there already have been throughout 2020 in the United States especially.

Research Training Program

Organisational Stakeholders and Stakeholder Expectations Customers and shareholders are the most important organisational stakeholders for private sector organisations and their expectations are straightforward.

Neoliberalism and crushing bureaucracy in the public sector

As if this was not bad enough, public sector workers are also expected to read a relentless cascade of unintelligible, jargon-filled documentation explaining how they should do their jobs, and what results they are expected to achieve. Civil servants told us that the government retains its objective for greater regional equality and for officials to relocate to regional hubs as part of that agenda, and some expect relocations to form a substantial part of savings in the next Spending Review.

Neoliberalism and crushing bureaucracy in the public sector

It then sought to simplify each of these interactions, all the while measuring citizen satisfaction to track whether the changes were actually working.

Regardless, health status alone may not always be a good guide to expected expenditures in a given year. Reducing the cost of government inputs most of which are sourced from the private sector is one of the main levers for doing more with less.

Public

Several of those we interviewed are wondering whether the review will offer a one, three or five-year plan for public spending — arguing that one-year settlements prevent the public services from the kind of strategic, medium term planning it needs to make the most of its funding. The three primary concerns raised by the Redmond Review were the fragility of the local audit market, policy objectives of legislation not being fulfilled, and a lack of leadership for the local audit system.

In a similar vein, the mayors of Boston and Philadelphia have each created an Office of New Urban Mechanics, which works with residents to fund and launch promising projects that address civic needs.
