Art in Space

And what greater human condition is there than our position on this singular planet amidst an ever-expanding celestial unknown? By all accounts a success, it provided a rare moment of introspection for astronauts. During Apollo 15, the small aluminum figurine was left on the lunar surface as a memorial to the astronauts and cosmonauts who had died. With a limited run of 1,971 signed and numbered pieces, the artwork marks the 50th anniversary of his idea, which, modified to meet NASA's requirements, became a memorial to the explorers who had given their lives in the pursuit of space exploration.
