Dog feeding without accountability

A major problem in India is that there is an insufficient number of legal slaughterhouses to meet consumer demand, and the federal and state governments sometimes appear unable to provide or stimulate the establishment of abbatoirs that are in compliance with the law, and unable to shut down the illegal abbatoirs. This is a societal preference that extends to humans, with sons being treasured more than daughters in some parts of India, and campaigners urgently trying to reduce the number of female fetuses that are aborted in the country each year.
