The merchant of Prato, Francesco di Marco Datini, 1335

In the heat of August 1399 Datini, along with hundreds of other Italians, made the Bianchi pilgrimage to nearby Arezzo, with hopes of pleasing God and fending off the Plague, the rumors of which were trickling down the peninsula. Hanna reveals his home life, his wives, children, and concubines, his relations with his family and friends, and how these relations evolved and were affected by the changing social and economic conditions—a perspective rarely discussed in works before the modern period.
