The Sea and Civilization: A Maritime History of the World

As Britain, following a series of successful wars with the Dutch and French, established itself by the 1760s as Europe's most powerful trading nation, rapidly rising demand throughout western Europe for sugar, tobacco, Indian fabrics, coffee, and tea meant increasing standards of material and social existence, even for ordinary western Europeans. Four or five times a year, a fleet of Portuguese ships would make a round-trip voyage between Lisbon and Goa.

List of largest empires

Blessed with a mild climate, lush vegetation, and expansive beaches, Goa proved to be a soothing balm for the weary Portuguese traveler after a long sea voyage.
