Young Contemporaries 1968: The Hornsey Light/Sound Workshop

What us and them don't share however, was a sudden global fame and outrageous fortune off the back of 'Dark Side Of The Moon'.

Digital delights at the Tate

Just to give a sense of this rich history we have been uncovering, 1965 was the first year that films were selected for Young Contemporaries as it was known until 1974. Somehow, the full-length clip from 1967 mysteriously leaked from the dusty BBC archives in 2006 or thereabouts, and inevitably made it to YouTube for our delectation and delight. .

The Cosiest Places To Visit In London

It would appear that the entire building was sort-of renovated and used for the nothing if not ambitious 'Museum Of Everything' during October 2009, an exhibition of the most bizarre, unusual, weird or, if you like, exciting, visceral and challenging pictures, paintings, sculptures and general artistic installatory-type stuff, using the comparatively cramped rooms and corridors to good effect. Cela ne ressemble à rien. They were slightly flexible, so Delia found one that made a good musical twang and played it with her thumb.
