The arc of the book is a three-week canoe trip down the Brazos River before a string of dams were built. Graves knows who he is and is at peace with this fact.

Graves' prose has striking spiritual and textual similarities with James Agee, John Steinbeck, Wallace Stegner, and Cormac McCarthy of This book, about a last journey down a section of the Brazos soon to be dammed in the late 1950s, should replace every copy of Walden on high school shelves in America. The book unfolds like the river he writes about, slowly, with many diversions and long, languid bends that almost but never quite circle back on themselves.

This one comes out later this month. The book speaks to me, deep in my core, and I thoroughly enjoyed reading it.
