[USC02] 47 USC 227: Restrictions on use of telephone equipment

Prior to the introduction of the ubiquitous fax machine, one of the first being the Qwip in the mid-1970s, facsimile machines worked by optical scanning of a document or drawing spinning on a drum. Faxes are received as attached or files, or in proprietary formats that require the use of the service provider's software. If the court finds that the defendant willfully or knowingly violated this subsection or the regulations prescribed under this subsection, the court may, in its discretion, increase the amount of the award to an amount equal to not more than 3 times the amount available under subparagraph B of this paragraph.

As this point was discussed, there appeared to be no clear consensus as to the timeframe required to make MSDSs available to an employee. I learned a few things regarding HAZCOM compliance, as many did, and am writing today seeking additional interpretations, and ways companies can alleviate the massive paperwork burden HAZCOM has brought upon them. If emails and attachments are made or received in connection with the transaction of public business, they are federal records.

ASME Data Report Forms

Federal records are the property of the Department, not the individual employee.

OSHA Hazard Communication Standard (HCS) requirements for Material Safety Data Sheets (MSDS).

This means that employers should provide a backup computer system when the main system is down for short periods of time for maintenance, repair, or power disruption. Magnetic recording media are not to be reused if the previously recorded information can be compromised in any way.

BLI Comparative Lab Test Reports & Awards

This system must be separate from the central email system and must follow retention periods pursuant to the appropriate records disposition schedule s.

Thank you for your interest in occupational safety and health. Employees must have access to the MSDSs and be able to get the information when they need it, in order for an employer to be in compliance with the rule.
