Applegate, OR

The rear wheels of the wagons were often locked with chains to help keep them under control. In 1843 three brothers, Jesse, Lindsay, and Charles Applegate and their families, joined the emigrants who traveled the Oregon Trail. In 1851-52, the rising water level of the lake forced the trail, which was at the toe of the slope on the lake bed, to turn to the left north and head toward Bloody Point.

Applegate Trail

Levi Scott and David Goff agreed to stay behind to guide the wagon train.

The Applegate Trail

Extensive erosion of the surrounding rocks eventually exposed the rocky outcrop that is visible today.

During the elections for the Legislative Committee of the 1845, Applegate was elected without his prior knowledge as the representative of one of five counties in Oregon at the time.
