Antarctic Marine Life

The producers in Antarctic food chains are tiny single celled plants known collectively as phytoplankton that float in the upper layer of the sea though they can grow at depths down to about 100m.

Mysterious, Gaping Holes in Antarctic Ice Explained

Many northern communities have also observed coastal erosion and watched the permafrost—ground that used to be frozen all year—melting and buckling under their homes and roads.

The Arctic and The Antarctic

It spends most of its life in the air, and only lands in order to feed and to breed.

Antarctica

There are fewer different species, but greater numbers of individuals of each.

Antarctic Animals List With Pictures, Facts & Information

Personal communications are the lowest priority, with people sometimes only getting as little as 10 minutes to access the network.

Antarctica

Without sea ice, hunting has become significantly harder. In the Arctic Ocean, different species of copepods have different life cycles and eating patterns and they are important sources of food for larger organisms.
