CIPFA Thinks: local government

They cannot have it both ways, but I do believe that we need to give more power over financial decisions to local authorities and I welcome the contribution that the hon.

Council finance: learning the lessons of Layfield and Lyons

It is something of such vital concern to the whole of our local government and central Government financial and taxation system, that I am certain that my noble friend while I share his desire for expedition in this matter would not want it to be dealt with except very thoroughly for it is going to have long and far-reaching effects.

Local Government Finance: 6 Jun 2007: Westminster Hall debates

If indeed the Government come down in favour of some form of local income tax—and they have not as yet had the opportunity to study this completely—as Layfield itself says, it would take at least five years before there could be any implementation of this proposal.

CIPFA Thinks: local government

I agree that there is a greater interest in localism and how services can be devolved to a level closer to the citizen.

CIPFA Thinks: local government

I would like to see a local income tax system being introduced smoothly and efficiently, but there are some points of principle that one would need to address first.
