There were two establishments and both published, — James Monroe, in the Lyceum Building, now occupied by the Harvard Co-operative Society ; and the University Book Store, where the Waldorf lunch room now is, at the east corner of Hotyoke Street. When he reached seventeen years of age, and they measured him, he was six feet, nearly four inches, high, from the bottoms of his moccasins to the top of his skull. His business interests in the West Indies carried him even farther afield.
