White People versus Negroes: Being the

Hubert Henry Harrison (1883

He was involved in the major debates of his day including discussions about class consciousness, Black nationalism, internationalism, freethought and trade unionism. Harrison was an immensely popular orator and freelance educator; a highly praised journalist, editor, and book reviewer who initiated the first regular book-review section known to Negro newspaperdom; a promoter of Black writers and artists including Rogers, Andy Razaf, Claude McKay, Charles Gilpin, and Augusta Savage; a pioneer Black activist in the freethought and birth control movements; and a bibliophile and library popularizer who helped develop the 135th Street Public Library into an international center for research in Black culture. The was led by, a prominent figure on the right, and party leaders in New York City began restricting Harrison's activities, including preventing his own branch from having him as a speaker.

Hubert Henry Harrison: of Harlem (Black Atheist)

He served as editor of the NEGRO WORLD and the analyses he makes of Marcus Garvey and the UNIA still must be responded to; I think that in many ways Harrison's analyses of the World War I era--and countless other matters-- are sharper than those of Du Bois. Review of The Negro Year Book, 1918-1919 edited by Monroe N. Most importantly, Harrison has not been better known because he was radical on matters of race and class in America.

A Hubert Harrison Reader by Jeffrey Babcock Perry

He viewed the Christian Bible as a slave masters book, citing passages in it that allegedly justify slavery in the Bible.
