Building flood resilience in Nairobi's informal settlement

The way that international development organisations and westerners view slums is often very particular and not always resonant with the way that slum-dwellers view their living situation. This book brings together two bodies of research on urban Africa that have tended to be separate, studies of urban land use and housing and studies of work and livelihoods.

Building flood resilience in Nairobi's informal settlement

The case studies are of varying ages and were implemented via partnerships with differing agents including government, NGO, CBO, private developer and donors. Much has been written about the problems they face, but few studies have asked why it matters that their housing is illegal, or what should be done about it. Recent decades of neo-liberal political and economic reforms have increased social inequality across urban space.
