Han'guk hyöndae minjok undong yön'gu—haebang hu minjok kukka kônsôl undong kwa t'ongil chônsôn [The Modern Korean Nationalist Movement: The Movement to Establish a Nation

In a modern sense of the word, nations were products of capitalist development although some Marxists allowed that the Korean ethno-nation could actually predate capitalism, due to the early emergence of centralized statehood in premodern Korea and the loci of all the contradictions inherent to capitalism, first and foremost, class contradictions.

Sin Chaeho

The main protagonists in the debates were, on one side, Marxists some of them related to the underground communist movement and, on the other side, more conventional nationalists. However, he also maintained that the progress of the class struggle is first and foremost nationally important, since it would influence the situation of the nation as a whole in the end cited in Paek S.

Demystifying the Nation: The Communist Concept of Ethno

The Journal of Korean Studies is based at the George Washington University. The Journal of Korean Studies is the preeminent journal in its field, publishing high-quality articles in all disciplines in the humanities and social sciences on a broad range of Korea-related topics, both historical and contemporary. Bauer preferred to solve ethnic issues with national-cultural autonomy for minorities, which would both alleviate ethnic discrimination and prevent the breakup of large multiethnic states by offering the minorities a practical alternative to secession.
