There was a growing concern about the health, housing, and income of the aged as well as their social adjustment and preparation for retirement. While long-term-care spending is small for the nation as a whole, it is large for the public sector; about 10 percent of public medical spending is devoted to nursing home care. Put 12 Population Forecasting for Fiscal Planning differently, it is usually assumed that there is no kind of feedback in the demographic system.

The Disappearing Defined Benefit Pension and Its Potential Impact on the Retirement Incomes of Baby Boomers

It is shown here that from 1984 to 1989 the real income of the aged rose slowly, and fell slightly relative to the income of the nonaged. Generational accounting examines only the distribution of taxes and benefits through fiscal policy. According to the National Strokes Association, the risk of having a stroke is increasing among young adults those in their 20s and 30s and even adolescents.
