Published for American Association of Law Libraries by F. B. Rothman - Classification of Costs: 5 Types

Ideal Systems	Available with Signposts	Capable of Same Enhancement
When bibliographic information is needed for acquisition, all available data on recent items is printed. A bibliographic utility is searched and copy for that title or nearest match is displayed.		*
If the title is not in the network database, a worksheet is displayed with all current information on it.	*
The information is automatically checked online against standard publishers' files (Books In Print, etc.) for verification.	*
The exact or closest match is again displayed and more complete data are added to the record.	*
All available information is recorded on the worksheet from either the network file or the book vendor and is dumped into the library's own database.	*
If the searcher is an acquisition librarian, and the items sought is not in the library's holdings, purchase orders are generated.	*
When the book arrives additional information is added to the record.	*
Cataloging personnel then call up the same record and add local data information such as call number, copy, branch, item call identification, etc., and indicate that the copy is ready for circulation.	*
Patrons have an online or remote database search for public access catalog via author, subject, title or virtually any term or field in the record and discover whether the work is in stock, in process, on a reserve cart or in the stacks ready for circulation.	*
Circulation calls up the same record when the item is checked out.	*
The same file is used to record serial holdings and generate claims for items not received within a stated period.	*
When items are withdrawn the same record is called up and deleted or made to indicate that it has been withdrawn.	*
The patron is able to know the status of a title at any time in the process.	*
