Special brothers and sisters; stories and tips for siblings of children with a disability or serious illness.

Researchers have found that children in families where a sibling has a disability can become more mature, responsible, self-confident, independent and patient. Remember parents are important models of behavior. This is something the whole family can work on together, perhaps with the help of the professionals who work with your child.

Sibling support: children with disabilities

Siblings often are not given thorough information about why a sibling has a disability, how it affects him or her and what the family can do to help this family member. I can't leave anything out in my room because she might get hold of it and it could be dangerous.

Siblings: Brothers and Sisters of People Who Have Intellectual and Developmental Disabilities

The Sibling Support Project also host SibKids and SibNet, no-cost listservs for young and adult siblings of people with special needs. Understanding what allows siblings to cope and do well and what constrains sibling relationships and sibling well-being requires research.
