Her determination to find, paint and therefore record plant species in the Amazon jungle during the early days of deforestation and despite enduring many extremely uncomfortable and even dangerous situations make exciting reading. She was one of the first to protest the destruction still taking place there.

Mee initially sketched the plants in the forest and then worked on the large illustrations of the entire plant in her studio in Rio de Janeiro. Jacket has light edgewear at the top, now protected in mylar. In 1988, when interviewed for American television, she recalled how on an earlier expedition, a gang of prospectors found her alone in her hut.
