Public health planning for local government

This chapter will first discuss why communities and community-driven actions to promote health are essential components in promoting health equity. Good communication with the media and the community will increase your chances for publicity and support when you need them. Consciousness raising is a process through which people come together to discuss the relationship between individual or group experiences or concerns and the social or structural factors that influence them.

The Socialist Health Association is a campaigning membership organisation. The more information you can gather, the easier it becomes to define the problem, to know if you're addressing something that's actually a major community issue, and to plan a strategy that will address it effectively.

The forthcoming increase in the community charge is not to pay for services, they are being cut. Recommendation 4-1: A public—private consortium should create a publicly available repository of evidence to inform and guide efforts to promote health equity at the community level. First, you have to follow up to make sure that there will be a well-attended second meeting at which work can continue.

Local Government

Geneva, World Health Organization, 2008. These two meanings of community - as a geographical area and as a set of relationships - are inseparable.

Chapter 2. Other Models for Promoting Community Health and Development

Conditions to foster actions toward health equity are reviewed as are the evidence and data necessary to inform community-driven solutions. As noted earlier in the chapter, Thunder Valley CDC has invested in long-term evaluation plans to identify the core elements of its programs and inform strategies in other communities. This necessarily means participation with a community of people, rather than an individual citizen, and needs to incorporate the diversity and dynamics of communities.

CDC

Community development is a powerful technique for community engagement for health. It is to shift money from local communities to government to fund tax cuts for the rich and corporations.
