. . The tub room is always first.

The Blood of Strangers: Stories from Emergency Medicine by Frank Huyler

With Huyler's light touch, the muting of a doctor's feelings and the coarsening of his spirit—which might have been rendered as callousness or indifference by a heavier hand—come off more gently, as a form of modesty, as a kind of phlegmatic wisdom, as an acceptance of limits. Jaw - A bawdy surgery resident takes the author to dinner and a movie.
