They offered an alternative to mass-produced goods, yet at the same time, many craftspeople hoped that their designs would be put into mass production, thus closing the gap between design and industry. Stonewashing—which means exactly what it says, putting new jeans into a pebble-filled washing machine—broke down the even color and starchiness of new cloth. None of The Jam had actually been to art school, but many rock musicians had.

These were also worn for exercise and for ice skating.

Fashions of a Decade: The 1940s book by Patricia Baker

The obsession with exercise began in the seventies but would last throughout the next two decades, bringing fashion and sport closer than ever. The unstructured look came increasingly to depend on the built-in drape and handle of jersey cloths, which could be made up quickly and economically but emulated the sophistication, body cling, and swirl of the pre-World War II bias cut.
