Optic Neuritis and Neuropathy: Symptoms, Causes, Treatments

Steroids are usually given by vein intravenously. Patients should be followed clinically for development of new neurological symptoms that could be consistent with a demyelinating event. Optic neuritis disrupts this process, affecting vision.

When ordering brain MRI scans, the FLAIR fluid-attenuated inversion recovery sequence should be obtained, and gadolinium contrast should be used to look for active lesions in which the blood- brain barrier has broken down. Up to 50% of patients with MS will develop an episode of optic neuritis, and 20-30% of the time optic neuritis is the presenting. This MRI of a patient with optic neuritis shows multiple hyperintense foci in the white matter, consistent with multiple sclerosis.

Optic Neuritis (Optic Nerve Inflammation): Symptoms, Causes & Tests

Gadolinium should not be used in patients with significant kidney disease or known allergic reactions to dyes used in contrast material. Catching inflammation in the optic nerve early can help a doctor devise an appropriate treatment plan to help prevent further damage. Optic neuritis is typically treated with high doses of steroids.
