Aluminium in the Building and Construction Industries

So, park your camper, RV, or motorhome under a strong steel structure. Of course, not all coating lines operate at this maximum speed, so a more typical output may be 1,500—2,500 square feet per minute. Power Lines Its light weight makes it ideal for use in power lines and electricity.

Metal Garages

Quality control starts at the smelter, where billets of alloy are rigorously tested before they are dispatched to the manufacturer. CONCLUSIONS It is certain that Aluminium will become even more widely used in construction as pressure grows for buildings that are flexible, easy to maintain and offer low cost-in-use.

Metal Buildings

This is because, after anodizing, the surface film remains porous, allowing it to accept colouring agents, such as organic dyes, pigments, electrolytes or metallic. Organic coatings are simply vaporized when Aluminium is recycled, with any toxic gases removed by flue scrubbers.
