Inventing Vietnam: The War in Film and Television

Teaching Vietnam: The Politics of Documentary - Thomas J. However, television news coverage of Vietnam refuted that mythology with every frame by removing the narrative from the visuals of warfare; soldiering was depicted as both mundane and arduous, not as a story of victory.

Inventing Vietnam : the war in film and television / edited by Michael Anderegg

Over time, certain images increasingly become associated with the same frames, which come to stand for an entire unspoken narrative. Japanese businessman Sugimoto Yūsuke Kawazu accidentally kills a Vietnamese man. Of course, soldiering is more violent, so, as the goals of the war were transformed from glorious to mundane, the war's extreme brutality seemed aberrant and unjustified.
