Stanley Morison

Around it were sloping shelves containing a profusion of wood type, the like of which I had also never seen before, in all sizes, weights, and compressions imaginable.

The Old School Press

Two years ago I posted about a film describing the Monotype composition caster This photo is of the caster I owned in the 1990s, working from a workshop in Bromley, Kent, UK. After the first issue appeared in January 1913, he applied for and was hired as an editorial assistant.

The Old School Press

It was a skill shared by many others, including a fellow Bewick enthusiast, Gwen Raverat, whose work his own most closely resembles, and about whom he wrote in an appreciative introduction in 1959: She was not interested in lines for their own sake, or in decorative textures. To Honour the life of Robert Stanley Morrison and to keep their memory alive, follow these easy steps to add your personal response for this Veteran.

Past Royal Designers for Industry

This project was completed and published April 1940. Stone was exceptionally skilled in rendering the pattern of leaves, the texture of a wall, the light of a cloud or a mountainside, as a series of graver strokes.
