The buildings were to blend harmoniously into their surroundings.

Melt Architecture & Construction

The design of the public space in front of the new city hall is unusual, with a pool of water reflecting the plaza, the concrete arches, the fountain, and the walkways, all on the basis of an original Modernist design. The architect of the Berliner Philharmonie concert hall also impressed the people of Wolfsburg with this principle and implemented his design in 1965, beating out famous colleagues such as Alvar Aalto and Jørn Utzon.

The interior of the building also opens up ever-new perspectives for the visitor.

TORONTO: a melting pot of architecture and design

The building has a steel frame covered with aluminium and glass.

Melt Architecture & Construction

Over the past three years, the Chair of Landscape Architecture of Professor Christophe Girot and architecture students of ETH Zurich have been documenting the melting landscapes of the Morteratsch Glacier region, using underwater and self made contact microphones, as well as large- and medium- format analog photography.
