The evolution of the horticultural industry in the vale of evesham

With the exception of the 1920s, there was a continued rise in the consumption of horticultural produce. Concentrations of Small Holdings are noted in the Minutes of the Worcestershire Small Holdings and Allotments Committee 1892-1947 in the Vale of Evesham, Wyre Forest and the north east of the County, around Bromsgrove.

Black appraisers call out industry's racial bias and need for systemic change

Kathy Allen-Gray, a Black appraiser, has been practicing in Kansas City, Missouri, for over 20 years.

The State of the Appraisal Industry

The largest changes in acreage were associated with vegetables. The decline in horticulture acreage has not been halted in the first decade of British membership of the European Economic Community.

This Act extended earlier legislation by giving county councils powers of compulsory purchase to create smallholdings and the Board of Agriculture was made liable to pay half of any losses incurred in carrying out the scheme. Arrears of rent increased sharply, especially after poor summers such as the notoriously bad one of 1879, and temporary allowances or permanent reductions had to be made.
