Capitalism: Africa

Although Marx completely disowned the proposition that a people must move to socialism via capitalism, it is understandable that bourgeois academics ignore this and interpret Marx to mean exactly what he said he did not mean.

African development and the marginalisation of domestic capitalists

Sense of place and belongingness: Given that Africapitalism seeks to meet Africa where the continent is on its development path, it is underpinned by a firm and explicit value of sense of place and belongingness.

Top 10 Venture Capitalists in Africa

Against the RDP strategy to address the inequalities of the past, GEAR promoted redistribution through the market Aliber, 2003. In all this, it important to bear in mind the conjuncture within which such states will operate. Even in the context of new growth theories, we simply do not have evidence on the precise channels through which rent seeking adversely affects such variables as growth, if at all.

Review: African Capitalism, State Power, and Economic Development on JSTOR

The Development of Capitalism in Northern Nigeria. In Ethiopia, the emperor presided after 1935 over the conversion of feudal lands into private holdings, especially in the southern part of the country. Import-Substitution Industrialization provided the model, with protected home markets for consumer goods and agreements with foreign firms to import essential capital-goods inputs.

Africa's Capitalist Revolution

In the push for exports towards which Africans are now being urged, it is suggested that governments provide selective concessional credits, export subsidies, etc. Rodney cites the example of a poster from Oxfam to explain how humanitarian entrepreneurship occluded the root causes of poverty to emotionally blackmail its backers. It is therefore essential to disassociate the anti-capitalist and anti-imperialist stance in Tanzania from a caption that has been pre-empted by non-revolutionary African leaders.
