SARTE ROMANTIC RATIONALIST IRIS MURDOCH

Obituary Notice: Born January 21, 1905, in Paris, France; died of a lung ailment, April 15, 1980, in Paris. Subsequently, humans seek to flee our anguish through action-oriented constructs such as escapes, visualizations, or visions such as dreams designed to lead us toward some meaningful end, such as necessity, destiny, determinism God, etc. Contributor to numerous books, anthologies, and periodicals.

1953 Sartre Romantic Rationalist

Other people enter it, one at a time, as the petrifying gaze of the Medusa, or at best as the imperfectly understood adversary in the fruitless conflict of love. The world is now the other person's world, a foreign world that no longer comes from the self, but from the other. Though not a trained philosopher, Conrad's interest in Murdoch's achievement as a thinker is evident in the biography, and yet more so in his earlier work of literary criticism The Saint and the Artist: A Study of Iris Murdoch's Works Macmillan 1986, HarperCollins 2001.

Murdoch explains Sartre's philosophy - through Nausea, Being and Nothingness, and his proposed tetralogy of novels - perhaps better than he himself does.

Iris Murdoch

It must be the consciousness of being conscious of the drive to be repressed, but precisely in order not to be conscious of it. Mary Warnock : a memoir : people and places. An example is something that is what it is existence and something that is what it is not a waiter defined by his occupation.
