Inhuman reflections: thinking the limits of the human

Critical Thinking Skills

And I'm not talking about human beings; just the stuff that we're made of, be it good or not-so-good. This essay was originally given as a lecture at St. It is also called concrete thinking as it is carried out on the perception of actual or concrete objects and events.

Reflections on Ordering the World

For good reason, Alien and its sequels have generated a bounty of scholarship about gender politics and monstrous, bio-horrific forms thereof. From this standpoint, Lyotard suggests that the generation of the sciences is also introspection into unknowns: the experimentation from what is already known towards the realization of unknown unknowns.
