Yet there is no suggestion of disapproval of the sentiments of this eromenos, who writes in the first person and is joining nay, launching the anacreontic tradition. On his return to Smyrna, in the midst of a tempest at sea and in exchange for having survived it, he promised the god Serapis to compose a hymn in his honour, which came to be the first writing that we possess from a long list of hymns and discourses. He saw and experienced the emphasis on the sacraments as a primary source of grace and on ceremonial in worship as a supposed expression of beauty and order.
