From the outset, her parents encouraged her to paint.

Lionel Bulmer and Margaret Green: A Painting Partnership

Both artists tackled the subject of female figures lost in wonderment amid the spectacular hats and dresses of a shop trying out the New Look after years of wartime utilitarian wear. In the deceptively innocent paintings of Bulmer and Green from this period, there may lurk a sense of the need to claim freedom from menace. From the start, their pictures showed a savouring of small things - a mantelpiece assembly leading to the scarlet gash of a single red flower, a table composition centred on the golden globe of an oil lamp.
