Japanese Ships to Pearl Harbor

Submarines Fleet submarines , , , and each embarked a for transport to the waters off Oahu. However, the live bomb just mentioned set the ship on fire and I lost power to my signal light. Second, it was hoped to buy time for Japan to consolidate its position and increase its naval strength before shipbuilding authorized by the 1940 erased any chance of victory.

Naval Academy classmates had been serving on Arizona, and he could only wonder if any had survived its destruction.

Twenty other subs were stationed in Hawaiian waters. The Japanese had more than enough armor-piercing bombs to sink the ships inaccessible to torpedoes, along with two of the four battleships that were either double-berthed or in dry dock, and enough general-purpose bombs to sink all of the cruisers. A large number of her crew remained trapped on board; rescue efforts were only able to save 32 of her crew.

Japanese Ships to Pearl Harbor

A squadron of twelve were at Hickam Air Base and made the first bomber sortie in an attempt to find the Japanese fleet. To the Japanese, Pearl Harbor was an irresistibly easy target.
