In this context, I want to consider with you tonight the progress which has been made -- and the opportunities for still greater progress which have been brought into being -- in just one of these spheres: that is, in regard to the foreign monetary policy and international economic leadership of the United States. I do so because nuanceS and ambiguous phrases can only mislead the American people as to the urgency of the problems we face. This Financial Management Conference, sponsored by the Joint Financial Management Improvement Program, is being held to emphasize opportunities for improved financial management in the Federal Government.
