Sheikha Al Mayassa: Globalizing the local, localizing the global

This impression has been reinforced in recent times by the role Europe played in the creation of Israel and the blind support it has given to the Jewish state while ignoring the plight of the Palestinian people. Where are the places of convergence between these seemingly disparate practices: sustained religious self-interrogation, the achievement of deeper intra- and cross-cultural understanding, the growth of more fully inclusive and participatory democracies, and the formulation of wiser foreign policies? Civilizations, religions, nations, and families became oppressors and illusions all at once.

The Lost History of Western Civilization by Stanley Kurtz

. City and state colleges, more directly subject to public pressure than elite private universities, responded to this trend.

Encountering the globalizing West : civilizational dialogue / Hashim H. J. Musa

Is it because it's a soft option; we have nothing else to do? Students for Environmental and Racial Justice SERJ , a new intersectional group formed at Stanford in 2019, covers both bases.

Muslims from Malaysia to Morocco made it clear that they were looking toward American Muslims for guidance, support and initiative while dealing with the American establishment.

The Lost History of Western Civilization by Stanley Kurtz

The critics were onto something nonetheless. The point, after all, is that Western civilization and its American offshoot have oppressed other cultures, preventing them from attaining the self-awareness and maneuvering room they require to flourish in all their distinctiveness.
