Racial inequality in access to health care services

Blau and Blau suggest that these feelings lead to widespread social disorganization and violent crime. Paper presented at the Pediatric Academic Society Meeting, New Orleans, May 1998.

Enabling the participation of marginalized populations: case studies from a health service organization in Ontario, Canada

Qualitative case studies of community participation in four Ontario CHCs were carried out through key informant interviews with CHC staff to identify: i the approaches, strategies and methods used in participation initiatives aimed specifically at engaging marginalized populations in the planning of and decision making for health services; and ii the challenges and enablers for engaging these populations. Key informants talked in particular about the challenges of knowing which methods were suitable for particular marginalized populations because of the changes in cultural values and practices, and the social dynamics in these populations.

Conclusion: Family Violence and Homelessness: A Review of the Literature

Families need, and are beginning to demand, that the health care system respond to their concerns. Out of the Shadows at Last — Transforming Mental Health, Mental Illness and Addiction Services in Canada. Prevalence and correlates of emotional, physical, sexual, and financial abuse and potential neglect in the united states: the national elder mistreatment study.

But I know my go-to people when I have questions. The Morehouse study on Racial and Ethnic Differences in Access to Medical Care summarised racial and ethnic inequalities for a number of different diseases even after controlling for confounding variables.

Caring Together: Families as Partners in the Mental Health and Addiction System

It may be expanded to include other service providers, such as drop-in centres and food banks.

Ensure a comprehensive, well-coordinated, easy-to-access and culturally competent range of family services and supports in every LHIN region for families affected by addiction or mental health problems. A knowledge sharing infrastructure is now in place to deliver timely and effective quality of care as a result of the long-standing partnerships CCSO has developed and nurtured. Social disorganization researchers, in contrast to both of the above views, argue that the relationship between economic deprivation and youth violence is more complex, and could be better understood if the concept of social disorganization is integrated with economic deprivation.

Experiences of child protection workers in collaborating with adult mental health providers: An exploratory study from Ontario, Canada

First, he included a measure of the per cent of residents in a neighbourhood who were ever married and who were either divorced or separated. To a Canadian-born, white, middle class individual, the health care system, though admittedly imperfect, provides appropriate services in an appropriate context. Our struggle to navigate the mental health system and to get appropriate treatment in the years prior to his diagnosis almost cost us our marriage, and created a major health crisis for me.
