Chapter 8: In Touch With William Lyon Mackenzie: Colonel Anthony van Egmond by G. H. Needler (Canadian Transport Sourcebook)

There he became quite ill and was transferred to the Toronto General Hospital, where he died of a stroke on January 5, 1838. On being asked if all public notices were posted there, he replied: Why, dammit, there was no public; you were Canada Company or you were nothing. Instead, they decided to wait for Anthony Van Egmond to lead the rebellion into Toronto.

Huron Tract

As Van Egmond points out, this amounted to fraud and personal gain on the part of the members of the Canada Company, who had instructions to pay wholly in money allowed them by the Imperial Government. I firmly but politely declined to do so and he even dropped some threats.
