Discussions wanted to reach an answer so to understand whether the approach being used to reach policy makers was the right one. As innovation leaders in the agriculture industry, these new companies will be expected to play key roles in finding solutions for major agricultural challenges facing the world today.

Agricultural innovation systems in Africa: reflections on an international workshop

Securing access to land Land registration in Africa is still at low levels which makes it cumbersome and expensive for investors to secure access to land. Development-focused entrepreneurs and organisations are looking beyond just the accessing of inputs and equipment. Source: By Vivian Atakos, Catherine Mungai, and John Recha originally on.

Six innovations revolutionising farming

Sensor technology is also rapidly developing with agricultural applications ranging from crop production to animal welfare. Once considered a rural backwater populated by agronomists, extension agents and farmers, agricultural research is now being explicitly placed within global debates about innovation, technology, institutions and development. I found myself in several sessions with Cara Raboanarielina, a social scientist at.

Agribusiness and Innovation Systems in Africa

Using a 'total mixed ration' has been found to reduce labour costs, increase animal health and give farmers greater flexibility with feed ingredients. Customers use the model company service to prove their concept of the implementation and encourage their entire organization to adopt the new technology early on.

Can videos, songs and drama be used to promote agricultural innovations?

On the one hand, the potential of agribusiness represents a multi-billion dollars market while, on the other hand, such figures provide an illustration of the structural complexities which could make it difficult for industry players to invest in Africa.
